

Andreas Mercouri

Managing Director, Trident Trust Cyprus

MICROMANAGEMENT HAS NO PLACE IN HIS MANAGEMENT STYLE. HE IS ALWAYS EAGER TO LEARN FROM OTHERS AND MAINTAINING A WORK – LIFE BALANCE IS A MUST FOR HIM. HE VALUES HIS RELATIONSHIPS WITH OTHERS AND HE STRIVES TO BRING OUT THE BEST IN THEM.

“My management style can be described as anything but micromanagement! It is all about bringing out the best in people, providing guidance and support where necessary, and maintaining a high level of respect and confidence at all levels.

“I use my commute time to either plan and organize the day ahead or more importantly to unwind at the end of each day before reaching home. I also never discuss work at home.

“Having experienced several management styles during the course of my career, I chose to adopt the one I believe to be the best and most suitable. With the number of challenges faced in the industry over the last 10 years or so, there is always the need to adapt and further improve one’s management style.

“You must always find time for your personal life!
If there is a will, there is always a way!

“My greatest professional achievement -limiting my response to my time in Cyprus- I would say successfully steering the Company through the challenges of the 2013 banking/financial crisis, handling the uncertainty caused by the global pandemic and having to redefine, to a large extent the way we work.

“Many managers fall into the trap of thinking that they know or should know everything. Successful managers are those who accept that even they need to continue to learn and accept support and guidance from others.

“Relationships are key. Not only within your management team and Company as a whole, but also with all relevant stakeholders. No one person can know everything or do everything themselves!

“I am lucky enough to live ten minutes away from the beautiful beaches of Protaras. Spending time at the beach, especially with the children is my favourite pastime.
